The opening statement will introduce the topic of the argument and should include the following elements:

- a hook that grabs the attention of the audience
- a presentation of the topic of the speech
- a thesis statement that will note a clear purpose or message of the speech

Opening statement: Have you ever not known what to do, like choosing between doing homework now or let it for tomorrow? This is called internal conflict, and it happens inside our minds. I believe that people face internal conflict more often in their daily life, because they have to decide what they should do every day. Today, I will talk about internal conflict and explain why people face it more often in their daily lives.

Source #1 Firstly Internal conflict is very common and affects people's thoughts and feelings in everyday life.

Evidence because people often have different thoughts or feelings at the same time, like they want to do the right thing but also want something easier. These feelings they feel at one time create internal conflict, so it happens a lot in daily life.

Source #2 secondly they have opposite thoughts

Evidence studies show when people have two opposite thoughts they feel uncomfortable. To feel better, they may ignore their mistakes.

Source #3 and lastly this can make them feel uncomfortable when doing things

Evidence because people don't like feeling confused. When their thoughts don't match, they feel stressed, so they try to change their mind to decide again. This is why internal conflict can make people change their behavior.

The closing statement helps bring the debate to an end and should include the following elements:

- a reminder of the purpose of the debate
- a summary of the main points made during the debate
- a note on why your argument is better than your opponent's argument

Remember, no new arguments should be presented in the closing statement.

Closing statement: In conclusion, internal conflict happens more often in our daily lives. People often feel confused because they have different thoughts and feelings at the same time. This can affect the choices they make and how they feel.
